

Indiana's "No Call List" has been incredibly effective for me. I work evenings, so I would get at least five telemarketing calls a day before I go to work. It was always very annoying. No matter how many times I tell them to take me off the list, my name would get sold to somebody else who would then call me. So, I signed up for the no call list. Now, I only get about one call a month. It has made a drastic difference in the quality of the peace and quiet at my house during the day.

I understand that the FCC is trying to implement a similar policy. My concern is that the FCC rules will override state rules and weaken them, which means I will begin getting a lot more calls again. I think that individual states can deal with this issue a lot more effectively than the federal government can. Please do not implement a no call list at the federal level. Please allow states the ability to address the concerns of the people on a more local level concerning this issue.

Thank you,
